Ghost tabs from my iPhone kept appearing on my mac. It was driving me crazy. Logging out of iCloud and other solutions didn't seem to work. After lots of trial and error, I finally found the solution. Sharing here in case any one else is in the same boat. In Finder, delete these three CloudTabs to reset iCloud tabs on your Mac's Safari. Done.

I found a clue somewhere else on the web on how to fix that on macOS Sequoia. This is the process I used.

- System Settings -> General -> Airdrop & Handoff ==> Disable handoff
- Restart system
- System Settings -> General -> Airdrop & Handoff ==> Enable handoff
- Restart system

N.B.

- Maybe restarting the system is not mandatory; it can probably be replaced by log-off and log-in or completely ignored.
- There is no need to re-enable handoff for problem resolution, that step is just to restore things as they were before.
- This will most likely work on older versions of macOS where that setting is available.

Hi, so I wanted to share what worked for me. I followed the solution proposed by the OP first, and that made the iCloud tabs feature disappear from my MacBook safari unfortunately, even after a restart. In the end what worked to kill the ghost tabs that I saw on my iPhone, was to deactivate the iCloud safari save on the iPhone, select to delete the synced data from my iPhone, and reactivate it. Then I was left without iCloud tabs on my MacBook, for which I followed the same approach (deactivating and reactivating safari in the iCloud settings), and then restarted my MacBook after quitting Safari on both my iPhone and my MacBook. Hope this helps someone!
